These are usually called TRANSFERABLE or ESSENTIAL skills and they are REALLY important to getting and keeping a job.

They are skills like:

- Getting along with fellow workers;
- Asking for help when you need it;
- Customer courtesy;
- Punctuality;
- Time management;
- Being able to solve problems;
- Being adaptable and responsible;
- Basic reading, writing and math skills;
- Basic computer skills; and
- Being open to new learning.

Workers often underestimate and undervalue the importance of their transferable skills. Before starting training or upgrading, it can be useful to do an inventory of your transferable skills – they will help you succeed while you're in training/upgrading and, if you are weak in some areas, you'll want to find ways to strengthen these skills.
